Welcome...

This historic, gracious bed and breakfast retreat is an excellent example of a classic Charleston single house. Possibly given to Mary Scott in the early 1800's as part of her dowry, it provides an ideal location from which to explore Charleston. Located in the city's historic Ansonborough district, it is within minutes' walking distance of King Street's antiques and shops, the Market area, many outstanding restaurants, house museums, the National Park Service's boats to Ft. Sumter and the aquarium.

Some suites in this historic home have their original operating fireplaces for romantic winter evenings and several still have original hardwood floors. Free, secure off-street parking is a very welcome amenity. Internet access is available in the main house living room along with wireless Internet access to guests whom have a wireless ready laptop.

The owners' collection of antique furniture and linens mixed with period reproductions and oriental rugs graciously compliment this historic home.

Guest Rooms

Guests in the main house are also treated to a full Southern breakfast in the dining room each morning, while those in the Kitchen and Carriage Houses are provided with generous continental breakfasts.

All suites have private baths with mini-refrigerators or complete kitchens as well as central heat and air and cable television. Wireless internet service is available.

Each suite has or has access to its own piazza over looking the garden.

Lower Carriage House

This Suite is located just to the rear of the main house offers guests an intimate retreat. Along with its private entrance, the suite consists of a fully equipped kitchen, sitting room with cable TV and floor lamps, and bath with tub and shower.

The bedroom has a queen-sized iron bed. Guests are served generous continental breakfasts the room.
